Advance Directives

Patients who are capable of making their own health care decisions have the right to consent, to reject and to withdraw consent for medical procedures, treatments or interventions. They may say "yes", "no" or "I will think about it." For patients who are incapable, someone else must make decisions for them.

For many patients, this possible loss of control is a concern. Should they try to designate someone else to speak for them? How do they protect and effectively transfer their right to choose to a person whom they know will speak their mind and heart?

These concerns can be addressed by signing an advanced directive, a document that sets out guidelines for your future care. The two most common types of advance directives are the durable power of attorney for health care and the living will.

You have the right to have either or both documents as long as you are capable of making decisions for yourself. Once you are incapable of making your own decisions, you lose the opportunity to choose someone to speak for you or to make your wishes known about future health care decisions. For that reason, durable power of attorney for health care and living wills are like fire insurance - you must arrange it before the fire. If you become incapable of making your own decisions, without these documents in place the health care decisions made for you may not be those that you would choose for yourself.

If requested, the surgery center staff can provide you with official South Dakota or Nebraska advanced directive forms.
